Sacrifices
Worship ceremonies are invariably long and wordy, Worshippers wend their way through the magic of words into a heightened state of aware- ness where they drift amidst pure knowledge. Normal people who attend usually fall into a stupor of confusion and boredom.
Lhankor Mhy usually receives sacrifices of sheep, whose skins the cult uses to make parchment, Communal worshippers must donate cattle for sacrifice if they wish to benefit from the ceremony or the knowledge of the priests; in this way, sages of the cult often eat beef (apprentices eat mutton except on feast days). Lhankor Mhy especially loves sacrifices of books, scrolls, and maps, which he accumulates in his immortal library. A schism exists within the cult about whether it is better to sacrifice original documents or the only copy of documents, or whether student practice sheets are acceptable.
